INTRODUCTION
Research Background

Language is a means of communication. Language is one of the crucial tools for human beings to communicate with one another. By language, people will be able to interact with others. We need language to exchange information, communicate, and interact with others. That also can be a medium to express a human's feelings. People can express their thoughts, feelings, and ideas using language. Hornby (1987) states "Language is a human and non-intensive method of communicating ideas, feelings, and desires utilizing a system of sound and sound symbols." In literary works, most authors express their feelings by using figurative language in their writing. The languages used in literary works convey the explicit as well as the implicit feelings and thoughts of their characters. Someone may use figurative language to create unique and aesthetic communication because figurative language contains kinds of expressions on utterance types such as irony, sarcasm, hyperbole, idiom,
